One of This Paper for Progressive and Prosperous People

There are cheaper papers than the Evening Journal for those who prefer cheapness to merit.

But there is and will be no paper as good as the Evening Journal for those who prefer merit to cheapness.

With the great increase in cost of materials and machinery, with the increased pay for labor and the increased profits for dealers—which increase these valuable elements of the community not only demand but deserve—a publication is confronted with the necessity of either raising its rates or reducing its quality.

The Evening Journal, therefore, with the purpose of maintaining its superiority over all other New York papers in excellence of news and features, raises its circulation rate the minimum amount.

What Damon Runyon Says:

Sid Mercer is the best baseball writer in America.

Any man connected with the baseball world in any capacity—manager, magnate, player, or bat boy, will say the same thing.

He was born in Paxton, Illinois, well under forty years ago, and began writing baseball in St. Louis as a mere kid. He was secretary of the St. Louis Browns for several years in the early days of the American League. He knows baseball politics better than any man writing of the game, and is a fair and fearless critic of the politicians when criticism is necessary.

He stands away out as a baseball writer, but Sid has also followed boxing, football and other lines of sport, and has equipped himself as an all-round authority on the subject.

Brilliant, entertaining and informative—that's Mercer. The Evening Journal always has the best, so it necessarily had to have Sid.
